Teacher Instructions (Cont'd)

A second way to use this resource in the classroom would be to create a set of success criteria the whole class could reference during reading lessons. As a new learning goal is taught in class, the teacher could add a new strip to the flip chart - starting with one or two, and ending with a full set by the end of the year.

I used binder clips (book rings) to attach the strips together. You could also glue the strips to ribbon pieces down the back.

The goals are written in the "I can ..." format to give students ownership over and accountability over their learning.

There are two different sets included in this resource - one with CCSS standards listed on the cards, and one without. Print only the set you need for your classroom. NOTE: If you teach a split grade class, the standards are similar enough that you could use just one grade level, and use the version without the standards listed on them (which is what I do with my split grade class).

The reading goal reflection is included with two reflections per page for easier copying. Simply cut the papers in half for easier storage if the reading goal envelop. To meet the needs of the students in your classroom, you may choose to not complete the reflection with some students, or introduce the reflection later in the year.

I have also included a blank strip in case you need a reading goal that is not included in this resource. To keep with the "chalkboard" theme, the goal could be written in white-out, or a white paint marker.

I have a similar set of WRITING GOALS for all grades that you can view HERE.
